

Role summary

Job title: Technical Director Highways

Salary: From £50,000 to £60,000 per year

Location: Hybrid with home working or in our Northallerton, Otley, Kendal or Cockermouth offices. Some travel required to visit sites across the North of England

Contract: Established, full time

The Role

Our newly established highways team, is looking for an experienced Engineer to lead and manage our long-term secured programme of work. You will be joining a skilled and dedicated multi-disciplinary team of staff and as Technical Director you will be central to leading and overseeing the technical delivery of schemes as well as managing the highways team and their workload.

Using your significant experience you will develop highway and engineering designs from concept to detailed design and maintenance works. You will manage projects with resources and changing workloads, co-ordinating the highway design process and integrating with associated statutory, environmental, geotechnical and structural engineering designs.

Using good communication skills you will liaise with both contractors and clients both remotely and in person, attending project and site visits when required. A valid UK driving licence will be essential to carrying out these aspects of the role.

If you are interested in working for a dynamic, expanding, forward-thinking company, you could be the newest member of our team at Align.

Skills and Qualifications

- A civil engineering degree with vast experience in highway design
- A sound engineering foundation and an interest and understanding of highway design principles (alignments, drainage, footway and carriageway construction etc.)
- A sound knowledge and experience of dealing with statutory section agreements
- An experienced manager of people with a proven track record of delivery
- Good working knowledge of different contract types and procurement options including but not limited to NEC3
